In the farm all of the animals respected Old Major, he was the only animal who told the others the seven commandments, and 'beast of England.' But once he died all of the animals were upset but they all respected the seven commandments, and they would go inside Mr. Jones house and destroy, rip up the clothes were forced to wear. A few days passed, and all of the animals worked harder than ever during the summer, they were all happy with what they had. But they all knew that someone has to be in charge of the farm since Old Major passed away. It was Snowball, and Napoleon who wanted to be the new leaders of the farm. But Napoleon had a few tricks up his sleeves he ambushed Snowball with the other dogs that he trained so all of the other animals wouldn't see much in him.

Rules create the lines of what is and is not allowed. However, there are always some spaces between these lines where people manage to act disregarding the rules. Once there is a group of these people, they will become a corruption that grows continually until it consumes the entire system. George Orwell's Animal Farm shows how these rules, which were meant for good, can be meant for the worst imaginable as well.

Rules exist in life to show how to keep order; they are set up to create a boundary for people, setting the limitations for the "dos" and "don'ts" in society. With guidelines for acceptable behavior, people know when they are out of control and, hopefully, can bring themselves back in line. Once rules begin to alter or cease to exist, it creates chaos. According to Animal Farm, rules provide stability until taken advantage of and changed.

Rules exist in life to show how to keep order. Since the beginning of mankind, rules have governed the way people live life. If broken, there is almost always an appropriate punishment that is determined, usually by the creators of the specific rule or by those who enforce them (e.g. Government, Police officers, vigalanties, teachers, your parents, etc.). According to Gorge Orwell's 1946 novel Animal Farm, rules provide stability until taken advantage of and changed.

Rules exist in life to show how to keep order. Rules being followed means that there is no trouble and therefore will not be any consequences. Rules are important in every society. Every leader has their own way and idea of how to do things. With a dictator as leader, he will like rules that favor himself the most, while a good leader will think about the people instead of only himself. According to George Orwell's 1946 novel Animal Farm, rules provide stability until taken advantage of and changed.

Extra Introductions

According to different people, rules can mean different things. We all view them as either good or bad. No one person really knows what rules mean. That makes rules hard to follow because we don't know which are the most important. According to George Orwell's 1946 novel Animal Farm, rules are used to gain dominance over society.

What do you think Rules are placed for? There are many ways, and Reasons why Rules are placed anywhere in a city, or it might even be a school. Rules have been created then broken, symbolizing how Rules are changed in society to benifit certain people.

According to george orwells 1946 animal farm it shows rules are really unecessory because rules are always broken and no one follows a lot of the rules we have so to me there's really no point to rules at all. I heard this man say "if rules are suppose to keep this great nation of ours safe, then why are we in danger?"

George Orwell's 1946 was written to tell us what does rules to society. According to George Orewll's novel, Animal Farm, it demonstrates that rules are unnecessary, but George Orwell wants readers to think if the rules are necessary or unnecessary.

In the book, Animal Farm, there are rules established to the animals of Manor Farm. These rules help the animals create a peaceful community amongst themselves. According to George Orwell's 1946 novel Animal Farm, rules are necessary because they help society to become more civilized assuming that the rules are only changed for the better of everyone.

What are rues? Rules are a set of laws people are supposed to abide by. Rules are needed everywhere in society, schools, homes and public. According to George Orwell's 1946 novel Animal Farm, rules are necessary because it keeps people's rights fair and the people following them on track.

I George Orwell's Novel Animal Farm he explains how we have rules and laws, and whether or not they're neccesary. Laws are unneccesary, because many people break them and don't care; others find ways to bend them so they can break them but not get in trouble. Either way, rules don't apply to everyone and only help certain people instead of benefiting everyone. According to Gorge Orwell's 1946 novel Animal Farm, rules provide stability and comfort, as well as help conduct society, until taken advantage of and abused.
